Indigo Blue Comanche 3 Catherine

Part 3 of the Comanche series and the setting for Indigo Blue takes place about 20+ years AFTER Comanche Moon where Hunter and Loretta's daughter (second child), Indigo, is 19. In Wolf's Landing, Oregon. For me, the story took too long to get going.

Comanche Series by Catherine Anderson - Goodreads

Caught between the white and Comanche worlds, she walks a fine line, clinging to the ways of her father's people and the beauty of nature as she struggles to mesh with white society. In short, Indigo is a curious blend of innocence and rebellion, strength and vulnerability, a lovely girl in buckskin clothing who is ever conscious of the injustices that may be inflicted upon her because of her bloodlines.

One of romance fiction's most popular storytellers, Catherine Anderson hits the New York Times best-seller list with each of her scintillating works. Reissued after being out of print for many years, Indigo Blue is one of Anderson's early gems. In it, a high-spirited woman named Indigo—who is half Comanche and half white—lives a solitary existence among the Oregon folk who don't understand her.

Born of two worlds, Indigo Wolf was as free and proud as the noble Comanche blood flowing through her veins. No man has ever possessed her elusive spirit—until a magnificent stranger came to work in her family's mine. Jake Rand's bold caress ignited the flames of a searing desire that bound her to him. Yet, he was a man she dared not trust.

Indigo Blue by Catherine Anderson - Books-A-Million

Indigo stared up at him. "He's asleep under the bed." Jake closed the door and leaned against it. His heart began to slam. "Honey, is it Toothless? What made you cry?" She didn't answer, just kept staring at him. Framed by black soot, her eyes looked so light a blue, they reminded Jake of endlessly deep, clear pools of water.
